

SECURITY INCIDENT REPORT

Classification: Internal — SOC Use Only

Incident ID: IR-2026-001 | Severity: Medium | Status: Escalated

Executive Summary

On March 28, 2026 an alert was triggered after a user failed to log on 20 times in under 2 minutes, exceeding the detection threshold of 5 failed attempts. The system where this occurred was CLIENT2 under the user "jdoe" and the targeted account was the domain controller admin account "a-jlinang." The log on attempts were not successful on the admin account, however further investigation needs to be done so the incident will be escalated to Tier 2.

1. Incident Overview

The type of attack associated with the alert is a possible brute force attack. With multiple login attempts on a targeted account in a short period of time. Our Splunk Server created this alert from collecting logs from one of our endpoints. This alert was highly suspicious due to the nature of the attempted logins, since the number of user login attempts far exceeded the normal activity of a user failing to log into their account.

2. Affected Systems and Accounts

The incident occurred on one of our employee machines specifically, CLIENT2. The user that was operating the machine at this time was "jdoe" and the targeted user account was "a-jlinang" who is also a domain controller admin account. This is worrying because of the amount of privileges that account is entitled to, especially for Active Directory and giving and restricting privileges and access to other accounts. If the account is breached, an attacker would gain more opportunities to cause damage within the system.

3. Detection

For the alert, we used the following SPL query -

index=main EventCode=4625 | bucket _time span=2m | stats count by _time, Account_Name, host | where count >= 5

This SPL query looks specifically for failed logon events (EventCode=4625) in the span of 2 minutes of each other where the number of them is greater than 5. This is to best represent possible brute force attacks where there are multiple logon attempts (greater than 5) in a short period of time (in the span of 2 minutes) that all failed (EventCode=4625). The alert was configured to run on a scheduled cron expression (`* / 5 * * * *`), which executed every 5 minutes and searching the previous 5 minute window of logs. This ensures near real-time detection with no gaps in coverage.

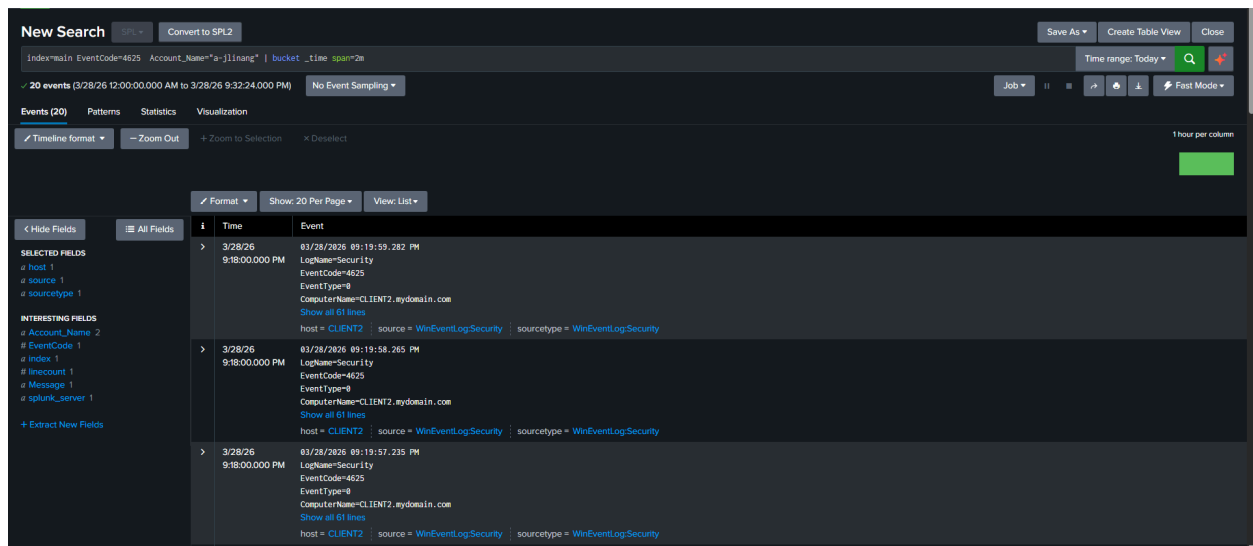

We can also best represent the results by filtering the stats of specific parameters like `Account_Name` and `host`, to identify the target and attacker.

The screenshot shows the Splunk Enterprise web interface. At the top, there's a navigation bar with 'splunk>enterprise' and various menu items like 'Administrator', 'Messages', 'Settings', 'Activity', and 'Help'. Below this, the 'Triggered Alerts' section is active. It features a search bar and several filter tabs: 'App', 'Search & Report...', 'Owner', 'All owners', 'Severity', 'All severity', 'Alert name', and 'All alerts'. The main content area displays a table with one alert entry. The table has columns for 'Time', 'Alert name', 'App', 'Type', 'Severity', 'Mode', and 'Actions'. The alert entry shows a time of '2026-03-28 21:20:00 EDT', an alert name of 'Brute Force Detection - Multiple Failed Logons', an app of 'search', a type of 'Scheduled', a severity of 'Medium' (indicated by a yellow dot), and a mode of 'Digest'. The actions column includes links for 'View Results', 'Edit Alert', and 'Delete'.

4. Technical Analysis

After the alert fired, we started our investigation by looking specifically at the failed logon event code (4625) and one of the affected account names (we chose `a-jlinang` since it is the domain admin account and as such has the most impact).

This was the following SPL query that we used when we began our investigation -

index=main EventCode=4625 Account_Name="a-jlinang" | bucket time span=2m

This SPL query looks directly for failed logon events which the account name "`a-jlinang`" is involved in within the span of 2 minutes. The result gave us 20 events, which is already a cause of concern, since a large number of failed logons in a short period of time could go beyond human error and indicate malicious activity, including a possible brute force attack.

We then investigated the logs, all of the logs are identical with the same affected user, the same event, and the same account and machines involved. It was the account "`jdoe`" on the `CLIENT2` workstation that was the threat actor that targeted the "`a-jlinang`" domain admin account. We can see this in the following logs:

This is most commonly a service such as the Server service, or a local process such as Winlogon.exe or Services.exe. The Logon Type field indicates the kind of logon that was requested. The most common types are 2 (interactive) and 3 (network). The Process Information fields indicate which account and process on the system requested the logon. The Network Information fields indicate where a remote logon request originated. Workstation name is not always available and may be left blank in some cases. The authentication information fields provide detailed information about this specific logon request. Transited services indicate which intermediate services have participated in this logon request. These logs tell us that the user who was on the account “jdoe” attempted to log on to the domain admin account “a-jlinang” from the CLIENT2 machine. The user was unsuccessful in doing so after 20 attempts under 2 minutes.

We can confirm this by reviewing the successful logons to that account using this query:

```
index="main" EventCode=4624 Account_Name="a-jlinang"

The screenshot shows the Splunk Enterprise search results page. The search bar contains the query: `index="main" EventCode=4624 Account_Name="a-jlinang"`. The results show 2 events. The first event is from 3/28/26 12:00:00.000 AM to 3/29/26 12:00:00.000 AM. The second event is from 3/28/26 8:30:17.936 PM to 3/29/26 8:30:17.936 PM. The event details show a LogName of Security, EventCode of 4624, EventType of 8, ComputerName of DC.nydomain.com, and host of DC. The source is WinEventLog:Security and the sourcetype is WinEventLog:Security.

Only two successful logons happened with the account from 3/28/26 - 3/29/26 and the alert triggered at 3/28/26 at 21:18:00 or 9:18 PM but these logons happened before then. These logons also happened on the DC host machine, which is the domain controller machine.

Further analysis supports that the user on CLIENT2 failed to log on to “a-jlinang” if we also add a parameter to find successful logons to that account on the CLIENT2 machine specifically.

index="main" EventCode=4624 Account_Name="a-jlinang" host="CLIENT2"

In this search, no results showed up meaning that the account “a-jlinang” was not logged on to in the timeframe when the alert triggered. The attacker was also trying to log on to that account from the CLIENT2 host, and the successful logon events to that account came from the DC host which is expected activity from the domain admin.

5. Root Cause

From what we can tell from our logs, we know the attack happened from the account “jdoe” on the CLIENT2 machine. They attempted to log on to the domain admin account “a-jlinang” 20 times and were unsuccessful each time. They did this in under 2 minutes.

6. Severity Assessment

This attack severity should be rated a “Medium.” The attacked account was a domain admin account which is cause for concern if compromised, but the attacker was not able to successfully log on to that account so we do not need to escalate to “High” severity. We were able to confirm that the attacker was not able to log on to the account with logs supporting this showing that successful logons to that account on that day happened before the attack, and there were no successful logons on the domain account from the CLIENT2 machine. Without the domain admin account, the attacker would not be able to cause too much damage or chaos to the system even with a user account like “jdoe.”

7. Recommendations

We recommend contacting the user associated with the account “jdoe,” possibly disabling that account or resetting their password until investigations conclude and the threat has been stopped. This is to prevent further attacks from the attacker and remove their access to our system.

We should also consider quarantining the CLIENT2 machine and the account “jdoe” to identify what the attacker had access to and if they downloaded or hid malicious files. This is to investigate if the attacker had more agendas in attacking our system, to remove any C2 (Command and Control) and persistence methods that the attacker may have implemented to ensure continued access or escalated privileges.

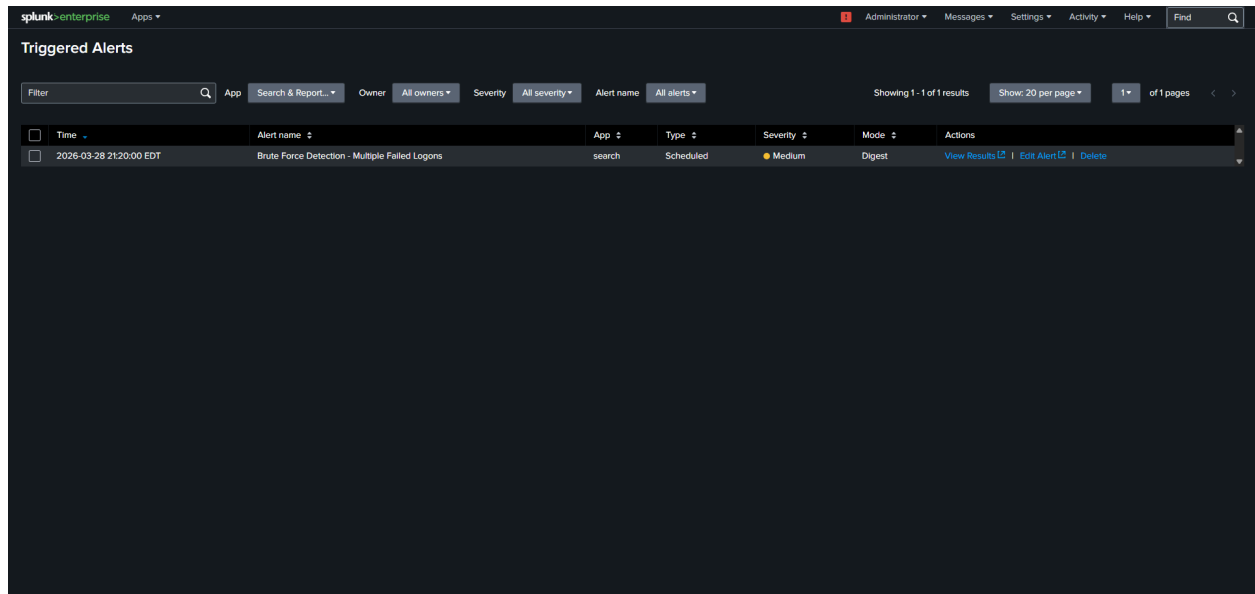

After ensuring that the attacker can’t utilize the “jdoe” account or CLIENT2 machine, we should consider policies like account lockout (ex. lock out passwords after 3 failed attempts) to ensure we have a stronger defense to brute force attacks, since the attacker can eventually break into the account with brute force if given enough time.

8. Appendix — Supporting Evidence

Exhibit - A

Triggered alert of possible brute force attack.

Exhibit - B

SPL query used during investigation. Includes results showing 20 events.

Exhibit - C

Inspection of one of the logs, specifically looking at the fields and values involved. Can be used for further SPL queries.

It is generated on the computer where access was attempted. The Subject fields indicate the account on the local system which requested the logon. This is most commonly a service such as the Server service, or a local process such as Winlogon.exe or Services.exe. The Logon Type field indicates the kind of logon that was requested. The most common types are 2 (interactive) and 3 (network). The Process Information fields indicate which account and process on the system requested the logon. The Network Information fields indicate where a remote logon request originated. Workstation name is not always available and may be left blank in some cases.
